

First Snow Buddha

We want that first snow to be pristine, pure like white but often it is weak, a precursor to the heavy cloak of virginity we hope will come. We want our gods to be strong, perfect, omniscient but they are not. They fall and diminish under the gaze of science and kings. It is the paupers that keep them alive – hoping for that heavy cloak in winter.